Invitation to seminar:

Health Inequities at the Intersection of Race and Immigration in the United States

June 8, 2018, 9.00-11.30 in room 5.0.22, Centre for Health and Society, Øster Farimagsgade 5, Copenhagen

People who belong to non-White racial groups will make up more than half of the United States (U.S.) population in 25 years. Racialized populations such as Blacks/African Americans, Latinx, and Native Americans have poor overall health status, significantly higher rates of mortality, and less access to healthcare compared to White Americans. Using hegemonic whiteness as the conceptual framework, I will explore racial inequities in health within the U.S. and describe how these inequities are reproduced by the racialization of immigration. We will discuss mechanisms that create and maintain health inequities, and consider potential solutions.

MESU in collaboration with Sirry Alang are pleased to invite you to attend the Seminar on Health Inequities at the Intersection of Race and Immigration in the United States.

About Sirry Alang: Alang, Ph.D. Assistant Professor of Sociology, and Health, Medicine and Society, Lehigh University, U.S.A.